Work and the DSP

October 2026

The Disability Support Pension or DSP is a Centrelink payment from the Government.

The DSP is for people who have a disability that affects how much they can work.

Some people worry they will lose the DSP if they get a job.

This is not true.

If you are 21 or older and single

If you make less than $226 a fortnight from work you will still get the full amount of DSP.

If you make more than $226 a fortnight from work you will still get some DSP.

For every dollar you earn over $226 a fortnight you will lose 50 cents of your DSP.

For example if you earn $726 a fortnight from work you will lose $200 a fortnight from your DSP.

This means you are still better off working.

If you earn more than $2701.40 a fortnight you will not get any DSP.

If you are 21 or older and live with a partner

When you live with a partner the Government adds your pays together to work out how much DSP you get.

If you and your partner earn less than $396 a fortnight from work you will still get the full amount of DSP.

If you and your partner earn more than $396 a fortnight from work you will still get some DSP.

For every dollar you and your partner earn over $396 a fortnight you will lose 25 cents of your DSP.

For example if you and your partner earn $1196 a fortnight from work you will lose $200 a fortnight from your DSP.

This means you are still better off working.

If you and your partner earn more than $4128 a fortnight you will not get any DSP.

If you are under 21

If you are under 21 the DSP rules are a bit different but you are still better off working.

For more information visit https://www.servicesaustralia.gov.au/payment-rates-for-disability-support-pension

How many hours you can work

There are also rules about how many hours you can work if you get DSP.

You can work up to 30 hours a week if you are in open employment.

Open employment is when people with and without disability work together in regular jobs.

You can work more than 30 hours a week on the DSP if you

- work in an Australian Disability Enterprise

  or

- get support from Inclusive Employment Australia.

Australian Disability Enterprises or ADEs are a type of employment for people with disability who need a lot of support to work.

Disability Employment Services → Inclusive Employment Australia

Finding careers for people with disability

Inclusive Employment Australia (IEA) is the new name for Disability Employment Services or DES.

It is a Government program that supports people with disability to find and keep a job.

You can find more information about Inclusive Employment Australia by visiting https://www.dss.gov.au/inclusive-employment-australia

Reporting

You must report to Centrelink every fortnight to tell them

- How many hours you worked
- How much you earned from working
- How much your partner earned from working if you are a couple.

It is important to report every fortnight so Centrelink can pay you the right amount.

You can report:

- On the phone by calling 133 276
- Online from your Centrelink account on MyGov.

The 2 year rule

Centrelink will put your DSP on hold for up to 2 years if you

- Earn more than $2701.40 a fortnight as a single for more than 12 fortnights in a row.
- Earn more than $4128 a fortnight as a couple for more than 12 fortnights in a row.

- Work more than 30 hours a week in open employment.

This means you do not have to worry if some weeks you work too many hours or earn too much to get the DSP.

Your DSP will start again as soon as you tell Centrelink about the change.

centrelink

You can keep your Pensioner Concession Card for up to 2 years after your DSP stops.

Your Pensioner Concession Card helps cover the cost of things like

- Some medications
- Public transport

- Electricity and gas bills.